Bad Poem

Wolfman ages as a dog

Snarling until his teeth decay

Hollow cheeks, never to grow his pack

Will it be the River Styx or the Rainbow Bridge for you?

Voluptuous Vampire needs no hunt

Seduction of prey lost to time

Domestic feed, domestic heft

No, no, don't get up. I'll show myself out.

YOU

Kudzu Flower Wine

4 quarts well water [i.e. non-chlorinated, non-fluoridated water]

6 quarts fresh kudzu blossoms

yeast

4 cups sugar

1 gallon jug

1 balloon

Pick kudzu blossoms when they are dry (mid-day). Rinse in running water to remove any foreign particles, dirt, or dust. Pour three quarts of boiling water over the blossoms and stir. Put a lid on the container and stir twice a day for four days.

Strain the liquid through a clean cloth. Press the blossoms to get all the liquid from them. Add four cups sugar. Dissolve yeast in lukewarm water. Pour the dissolved yeast into the liquid. Stir well. Cover and let it stand for five days. Then transfer to a one-gallon jug. Add enough well water to bring the liquid within two inches below the neck of the jug. Attach the balloon to the top of the jug. Place jug in a cool dark place that is between 65° F to 75° F.

Periodically gently loosen the balloon and allow the gas to escape and then replace the balloon firmly on the neck of the jug. In approximately six weeks the balloon will stop expanding and the wine is done. Strain the wine through a clean cloth and transfer it to airtight bottles. (Optional: Drop five raisins into each one-gallon bottle.) Cork each bottle tightly. Allow it to sit for an additional six to twelve months before drinking.

Doctrine of Signatures

Hmm. Kudzu grows like it's on steroids.

Well, it does contain steroids.

So there's that.

Rant

Flowers of Death or How I Killed my Plants

Let me force you to live in a constrained pot.

Let me expose you to a blazing hot summer you're not suited to.

Let me forget to water you.

Let me dampen you with chlorinated and fluoridated water.

Let me postpone your repotting.

Let me procrastinate your regular pruning.

Let me starve you of nutrients.

How are you even still alive?
